Islam in the Social Studies Standards: An Introduction

Understanding Islam is important at many points in the middle and high school social studies standards. Islam's inception, major beliefs, rapid initial growth, influence on culture, conflict with the west, diverse traditions (Sunni, Shi'a Sufi) and continuing influence in world affairs are all part of expectations in middle and high school, especially in World History. Our presenters are experts at demonstrating how events from the past and the present are best understood when they are connected. You will gain new knowledge and learn ways to help your students understand these connections.
